

British Library Labs
Experiment with our digital collections

<http://labs.bl.uk>

British Library Labs

British Library Labs is an initiative funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation which supports and inspires the public use of the British Library's digital collections and data, in exciting and innovative ways.

We encourage scholars, innovators and the community to work with us and the digital collections, supporting the British Library's mission to guarantee that the wealth and diversity of the Library's intellectual digital heritage is available for the research, creativity and fulfilment of everyone. At British Library Labs, we invite researchers, developers, educators and artists to address an important research question or idea using the Library's digital content and data, by entering our annual Competition or becoming involved in a collaborative project.

We also engage with past and current users of the digital collections through our annual Awards, which recognises outstanding work that has been created using the Library's digital content, as well as through organising and hosting a variety of events.

Images: City of London map (detail), 1666.
Purple Heron by John James Audubon, 1827–38
Modern Witchery poster (detail), 1894.
Background image © jurgenfr@photos.com

Find out more and sign up at <http://labs.bl.uk>